

National Security Youth Ambassador Training Scheme

- Deputy Commissioner (Development and Youth) of the CAS, Dr Wong Kong-tin, delivered a seminar titled "National Security, Public Safety, and Peace of Mind" for National Security Youth Ambassadors and cadets.

- CAS National Security Youth Ambassadors promoted national security awareness among the public and cadets through community service activities.

To foster a sense of patriotism among Hong Kong's youth and enhance their understanding of the importance of national security, the Security Bureau and the Home and Youth Affairs Bureau jointly launched the "National Security Youth Ambassador Training Scheme" in early 2025. The scheme targets young leaders from various uniformed youth groups, with the aim that upon completion of training, they will promote national security messages within their respective teams, schools and among their peers, thereby embedding national security education in the younger generation.

The Civil Aid Service actively responded to the scheme by nominating outstanding cadets and young instructors to participate in the training. The curriculum covers modern Chinese history, national conditions and development, the holistic view of national security, an overview of national security laws in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, key case studies, and personal participation and contributions to Chinese modernisation. Courses are taught by experienced educators, university lecturers, and legal professionals, and include visits to the National Security Exhibition Gallery, interactive classroom learning, and training in national security message dissemination techniques.

By the end of 2025, two training sessions had been conducted. Four cadets from the CAS Cadet Corps completed the training and were appointed as National Security Youth Ambassadors. Looking ahead, the number of National Security Youth Ambassadors is expected to grow steadily, further expanding the reach and impact of national security education.

Cadet Corps Outstanding Cadet Selection

The CAS Cadet Corps successfully conducted the Outstanding Cadet Selection 2025 on 16 March 2025 and 30 March 2025 respectively. In order to improve the flag-raising skills of the cadets, a flag-raising competition was newly introduced in 2025, and each company was required to send one team to participate in it.

Mr Leung praised the contestants for their energetic spirit, tidy uniforms, and neat formation, which fully demonstrated the results of their hard training.
